the opening of a new line.

Cheered by the hearty welcome which we received, and splendidly reinvigorated after our thirsty march, we were soon out in the compound admiring the view of the city as seen from the grounds. The walls of the city, stretching for niles over the hills, were pointed out to us, as well as the walls enclosing the palace grounds; a glimpse of the palace roofs and the summer pavilion being also obtainable. In another direction was the old palace, occupied by the king previous to the massacre of 1882; but unfortunately our stay in the capital proved so short that we were anable to procure the necessary official permit to pay it a visit. Fronting the main portion of the Paktung compound is the semi European residence occupied by the Vice-President of the Foreign Office and Mrs. von Mollendorff, who presently joined with our friends at the capital in offering us a kindly welcome. The Vice-President was habited in full Korean Naval Yard, recognised them as the property of robes, with a horsehair head-dress of eccentric, though more becoming shape than the hideous head-gear worn by the Koreans who are frequent ly seen in Shanghai. Herr von Mollendorff holds high rank among the nobles of Korea; and as it was necessary before he could be promoted to so high an office in the Government as that with which he was entrusted, that he should be the descendant of a line of noblemen, his ancestors for some few generalloss back have also been raised to the Korean peetage. At the time of our visit the fortunes of the Vice-President were, as is well known, somewhat overclouded. He was temporarily suspended from the discharge of his duties in the Foreign office and as Inspector General of Customs; and the duties of the latter post were then in the hands of Mr. Stripling, Commissioner at Chemulpo who had arrived in the capital a few days before . Herr von Mollandorff showed no reluctance to discuss the political situation, expressing on cock and steward of that ship, on a charge of the whole a very hopeful view of the future of assaulting him on the 6th September, on the the country. Herr von Mollendorff said, had since been strongthened by the cocupation of Port-Hamilton that made the Korean Govern. and complete the organisation of the Korean army. Herr von Mollendorff could not, of course, contend that this was a piece of purely disinterested friendship on the part of Russia; but he appeared to have believed that, with the moral support which he would receive from mixing a much needed service from that country without sacrificing the independence of Korea or indeed making any serious concession in return for the With the action of China, Herr von Mollendorff expressed himself still less satisfied. While claiming the rights of a suzerain, she had ignored the duties; when the country was plunged into disorder by the massacre of last year, which Herr von Mollendorff attributed entirely to Japanese instigation. China had given no support to her wassal state, but had, on the contrary made a treaty with Japan which was a virtual renunciation of her suzerainty. And yet now, when it suited her ends, she claimed the right to interfere in the internal government of the country. The action of China in sending back the Dai In Kun would be feared, give rise to dangerous intrigue, though the advanced age o the Prince rendered the danger less serious than it would otherwise be. The compound in which we were walking had been the scene of some of private launches and gigs surrounded the steamer pound—in which are situated the head quarters had been instigated by the Dai In Kun in 1882, the Queen's father having been murdered in the very house which we had just left. England, Herr von Mollendorff contended, had done much by her action in regard to Port Hamilton to throw Korea into the arms of Russia. The Korean Government was, he said, unable to do more than enter a formal protest; and Russia naturally complained that Korea was guilty of a breach of friendly relations in allowing England to seize on a portion of Korcan territory as a menace to Russia. Had England in the first instance announced to Korea her intention of taking Port Hamilton, either temporarily or in perpetuity, there would, Herr von Mol-lendorff believed, have been less ill-feeling on the part of the Korean Government; but up to the last moment assurances were, he said, constantly

The art of running long distances does not seem to have made much progress in France, if we may judge by a description of a match which took place there recently. Whe- ON CALOUTTA .ther this man is, as his name would suggest, an Italian, or of French nationality, we are not told, but his title to fame is said to be that of a foot-runner, and we fear that in any country except France it is not one which will gain a great deal of credit or renown. The distance from Rouen to the bridge in question, after allowing for all deviations in the road, cannot be made to include more than seventy-seven English miles, and the runner did it in twenty-three hours and a quarter, so that his average pace was not much over three miles on hour. We find that the same distance has been done in England repeatedly, both by professionals and amateurs, in considerably less than half the time, and that ithas been done in fair heel-and-toe walking, with great ease, in fifteen hours. The French "runner" was five hours doing his first twenty-three miles, so that he went more slowly than any average field of second-class walkers would go for the distance, without running at all.

liquor traffic of the United States. The wonder is, not that the Americans suffer from bad digestion, but that the process of digestion does not entirely cease. The basis of spirituous liquors is "spirit." It is made of prune juice. New England rum, and "beading oil." This latter is a compound of sulphuric acid, oil of sweet almonds, and ammonia. It destroys all the tissues it touches when swallowed in concentrated form; when greatly diluted it injures the teeth and exhausts the digestive powers. To make Bourbon whisky, Bourbon oil is mixed with "spirit" The oil is distilled from a compound of fusel oil, acetate of potash, sulphuric acid, sulphate of copper, oxalate of ammonium, and black oxide of manganese. Sulphate of copper is a deadly poison; oxalic acid kills in a few minutes; and fusel oil from "spirit" and "cognac oil"; this latter is China Sugar Refining Company, Limited—$82 distilled from oil of cocoanuts, sulphuric seid, and "Scotch" whisky is made of "spirit" and oil of birch; Hollands gin of "spirit" and oil of juniper-berry. Muriatic acid is used in making claret; and oil of bitter almonds, which is hardly inferior to diluted hydrocyanic sold in its poisoning power, in making maraschine. Some interesting information has been received respecting the deep gold mine at Sandhurst. The mine in question, Lansell's No. 180 is the deepest payable mine in Victoria, the depth of the shaft being over 2,000 feet, and gold-bearing quartz has been seen as far down as the bottom of the sheft. It is a private mine, owned by Mr. George Lansell, and yielded well down to a depth of 400 feet. He continued to sink against the advice of theorists, who said that no payable quartz would ever be found below the water level; and after ten years of prospecting, anriferous stone was struck at 1550 feet. Sinking was continued, drives being put in at regular intervals, and the yields of the stone crushed have been for several months published fortnightly, but as they only averaged a few pennyweights to the ton, they were not sufficiently encouraging to attract much capital in the direction of deep mining enterprise. Rumours, however, began to get current that the best stone in Mr. Lansell's mine was not being sent to the stampers; and from the fact that the last reported crushing of 425 tons has returned over 748cz., it may be inferred that these rumours have not been altogether without foundation. It has also been stated not only that there is a large body of payable stone waiting to be removed from the lower levels, but also that, if the best ground in the mine were crushed, a return of 1,000cz. of gold could be stained in any fortnight. Such a report as this is sufficient to determine the future of mining at Sandhurst for many a year to come.

BY JOSEPH HATTON. CHAPTER VIII.

OF LETTERS AND TELEGRAMS DRINGS THIS TRAGIC STORY TO Norbury, Liverpool, to Miss

Kate Norbury, Wyedale, Queen first thing in the morning. God bless you. Hope Aunt Dorothy is quite well. Best love."

From Kate Norbury to Joseph Norbury. "Trove and congratulations on your improved health. Fair weather, a pleasant rovage, and a quick and safe return. Aunt Dirothy joins with me and Dick in best wishes and God-speed."

From Joseph Norbury to Kate Norbury, "Good-bye, my dear sister, just off on the opinion was quite correct; it was change that luggage was "decidedly English." tilg to Ocean Queen; will write from New he needed. Also give his love to Aunt York ; write to me at New York hotel ; best Dorothy and to Dick, and accept the same love to all."

These three telegrams demonstrate the completeness of John Needham's escape, and the safe beginning of his new career in the assumed character of Joseph Norbury. Munday's newspapers, however, had a great shock for Kate Norhary, in the report of following history of the adventure of Kate John Needham's suicide. This was the one! he had written and described the odd seems to the historian that this remarkable circumstances of their meeting. The affeir letter brings to a sufficiently complete climax disturbed Kate a good deal; but Aust Dorothy calmed her with affectionate advice and wise comments upon the proverb that truth is stranger than fiction. On Tuesday night, however, when Kate read that Mr. Green, M.P., had seen John Needham on the platform of the Liverrool Railway Station, a strange sense of fear and alarm took possession of her, and the following telegram passed between her and Dick.

From Miss Norbury to Richard Woodville, Manchester. "Please come to Wyedale at once. Auni before eleven." From Richard Woodville to Horace Wrod of Wyedale, at The Cottage, Richmond Bridge. · "At what hour did you see Mr. Joseph

Norbury, on Saturday, and when did you leave him? Please reply at once." Wood to Woodville. " Dined with him at six, New Hummum's Hotel; left him at nine; why do you ask? Woodville to Wood. "Did he mention Needham to you in your conversation, and do you know where he went after dinner? And if you do not, please go to the hotel and telegraph at once the hour he went out, when he returned, and what he did. Kite is disturbed for some reason about him." Wood, New Hummun's Hotel, London, to Woodville, Wyedale,

"Am staying here to-night; return to morrow. Joseph did not mention Needham to me. The porter says he went out at about nine o'clock, smoking a cigar, that he returned at about half-pest one, said he had been into the country, and had lost the local train, seemed in good spirits, was called in the morning at seven, had breakfast, paid his bill, and left by ten train for Liverpool. Woodville to Wood. "Don't come down : I will come up-wait

Dick arrived in London on Wednesday night, read the evidence given at the opening of the inquest, conferred with Lawrer Wood talked with the porter, and on the next day asked permission to see the body of the The shell had been screwed down but through the influence of Mr. Wood the Coroner gave the necessary order to remov the lid. Decomposition had set in, but th face had not much changed, and Woodville was shocked at this resemblance to his friend Later in the day he had an interview with Mr Wilfred Green, the member for Harwood who stated that the gentleman he met at Liverpool said he was Joseph Norbury.

Then he wrote to Miss Norbury:-" The adjourned inquest takes place to-morrow, but -- - there are no new facts. The body was fully identified, and there does not seem to me -single suggestion, my dear Kate, to bear our your alarming fancy that Needham had killed our dear Joe and escaped in his clothes, &c. My dear child, it is only a bad dream. I saw the body this morning. It startled me for a moment; it was like him, but stouter and foller; and-well, thank God, it was not our dear, great-hearted Joe. The truth is you are lonely and fanciful; so also am I; and the best thing for both of us is to get married. What do you say now to this proposal—a honeymoon trip to New York? Won't that benefit you? Then you can tell Jos yourself what's dear silly goose you are, and what wildgoose chase you sent me on to this great, busy God-forsaken city, whon I would have much preferred a day's fishing in the Wye, a ramble with you, and an evening's whist with Aunt Dorothy at double dummy. Well, shall it be as I suggest, and to New York for our honeymoon?"

Thereupon followed in quick succession your arrival. I hope you like New York." the following telegrams: -
